FRANKFORD

The Frankford Choral Society is planning to do excellent work this season, having as its main object the study and rendition of choral compositions of the less known writers, as well as the works of the better known composers of both the classic and the modern schools. Frankford now has a splendid opportunity to build a singing class of merit.

The date has not yet been decided upon for the first concert.

The Young Men's League of the Frankford Presbyterian Church, will hold its annual banquet this evening.

The Marshall School will hold an "At Home" in the school building Friday evening, November 20, from 7:45 to 9:30 o'clock.

A most pleasing concert has been arranged, including a chorus of boys, who will sing some of the school songs. The object of the "at home" is to familiarize the parents with the work of the pupils. Everything will be artistically arranged and an enjoyable evening is expected.

The Hermon minstrels will give their annual performances this year for three nights, November 19, 20 and 21.

KENSINGTON

The Current Topic Club will meet tomorrow evening, November 18.

The Rev. Frank V. C. Cloak, pastor of the Emmanuel R. E. Church, was a recent visitor to Baltimore, Md.

On November 21 the girls of the Daisy Social will give the boys a Japanese party.

An enjoyable entertainment is in store for those attending the "Toy Shop," which is to be given by the members of the primary department of the First Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening, November 24, at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Henry, wife of the Rev. Albert Barnes Henry, rector of the church, is very much interested in making the affair a great success.

The North Philadelphia Interchurch Lyceum will give a second concert this evening.

WEDDINGS

Miss Mollie Harris will become the bride of Charles Petchon tonight.

A pretty wedding will take place this evening at 6 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Max Harris, of 221 North 23d street, when their daughter, Miss Mollie Harris, will become the bride of Charles Petchon. The ceremony will be performed by Rabbi Klein. The bride will be given in marriage by her father, and will wear a gown of ivory white satin charmeuse. The bodice will be of chantilly lace and pearl trimming, and the court train will extend from the shoulders and will be embroidered in pearls. The tulle veil with a cap of lace will be caught with orange blossoms and her shower bouquet will be of orchids, gardenias and lilies of the valley. The bride's ornament will be a string of pearls, the gift of the bridegroom.

Miss Harris will be attended by Miss Mary Petchon, a sister of the bridegroom, as maid of honor; Miss Kathryn Sherby, of Washington, D. C.; Miss Marian Cohn, Miss Elizabeth Schaeffer, Miss Mildred Hadler, Miss Lillian Lavin, of Bridgeton, N. J.; Miss Vivian Fliegman and Miss Lena Well will be bridesmaids. The two little flower girls will be Miss Gertrude Harris, a sister of the bride, and Miss Sylvia Petchon, a sister of the groom. Mr. Petchon will have Harry Harris, a brother of the bride, as best man, and the ushers will be Louis Harris, Isador Kirshner, Albert Ross, Louis Greenblatt, Samuel August, Sidney Lemich and Robert Segal.

After the reception, Mr. and Mrs. Petchon will leave for an extended trip through the North, and will be at home after December 1 at 221 North 23d street.

DEBUTANTE AFFAIRS

Miss Charlotte Fahnestock to be Presented at Tea Today. These are gala days for the little debutantes and the entertainments of the season seem to be almost entirely given to them. The presentation of Miss Charlotte Fahnestock will take place today at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Frederick Fahnestock, 227 East Rittenhouse square. The hostess will be assisted in receiving by Mrs. T. Hewson Bradford, Mrs. Edward S. Sayres, Mrs. R. Loper Baird, Mrs. Joseph R. Hutchinson, Mrs. C. Howard Clark, Jr., Mrs. James R. McClure, Jr., Miss Anna H. Faries and Miss Josephine M. McClure. A number of the season's debutantes will receive with Miss Fahnestock. Following the tea there will be an informal dinner and dance for the receiving party and a few additional guests.

A dinner of 25 covers will be given at the Rabbit in Fairmount Park by Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Beale for their debutante daughter, Miss Hope Truxton Beale, at which the guests will be from the debutante set.

Mr. and Mrs. William W. Fidler will give a theatre party, followed by supper at the Bellevue-Stratford, in honor of Miss Margaret Fidler, who made her debut at a garden party given by Mr. and Mrs. N. Myers Fidler at Riverton last June.

Irene Franklin at Keith's. "All Wrong!" Well, so far as Irene Franklin goes, not for a minute. She's all right! Especially when she sings "All Wrong!" a little ditty which is one of the most human pieces of Broadway put into song we have heard these many days.

At Keith's, where she is appearing, Miss Franklin sings other songs with which her name and type is associated. Adelaide—once known as La Petite Adelaide—and J. J. Hughes present a clever dancing act. Mrs. Doree presents a large company in "Great Moments from Grand Opera." Others on the bill include Charles Thompson, a clever juggler; Irene and Bobby Smith, who sing and dance; Andrew F. Keller, who tells stories, some of which are good, others not; Hawthorne and Ingis, who are relics of the days when the unintellectual mostly went to vaudeville, and the limber "Lunatic Bakers."

"Damaged Goods" Eugene Brieux's much discussed play, or dramatic message, called "Damaged Goods," was presented by a capable company of "Richard Bennett's co-workers" to an attentive mixed audience which gathered, doubtless under the impulse of many different motives, at the Walnut Street Theatre last evening.

Whether or not the future which has advertised it ever since a French censor turned it over to America has been due rather to certain peculiarities of the public mind rather than to the content and purpose of the play itself, the criticism cannot be made of it that a good sermon was spoiled to make a bad play. For "Damaged Goods" must be judged according to the advertising which the public has given it, and the public is not hugely interested in this particular play as an example of dramatic art. Its truth and its power, however, sufficiently guarantee its place in either classification.

Broadway The Four McNallys, in "His of Everything," head the bill at the Broadway this week and furnish an interesting 15 minutes in light bits of various performances, including acrobatic dancing, tight-rope walking and selections on many musical instruments.

THE DRAMA

IRENE FRANKLIN Keith's

A BRIDE ELOPES, DESERTING GROOM

"The Beautiful Adventure" an Amusing Play, Tense With Delicate, But Always Quite Proper, Complications.

A bride arrayed in all her wedding finery, well wreath of orange flowers, and yet, with the time of the wedding just a quarter of an hour away, miserably unhappy—such is the charming, yet pathetic, figure who appears in the first act of "The Beautiful Adventure," the comedy by R. de Fiers and A. Decaillevet, which opened a week's engagement last night at the Broad Street Theatre. Every one loves a bride, and the play appeals at once. Every one, too, commiserates with an unwilling bride, or an unhappy bride, and of course Helene de Trevillac at once arouses sympathy. Let it be said there have been few more winsome brides, or more pathetic brides, than the bride of this delightfully French and altogether appealing comedy as portrayed by Ann Murdock. Brides are common enough, but brides who regret their decision at the last minute—ah, we would not be cynical!

Helene suffers a tedious conversation with Valentin Le Barroyer, the bridegroom-to-be, who typifies those methodical, painstaking, matter-of-fact folk we all know, and who takes memoranda of all articles to be taken on the honeymoon. Helene tells Valentin of the place in the country where they are to spend their honeymoon, of the birds, flowers and trees which were her friends, and the unromantic dolt replies that "one really cannot make friends with trees." Helene is distracted. The wedding bells are ringing. But at the crucial moment Andre, with whom Helene is in love, turns up. Andre's mother, to frustrate a marriage with Helene, who is poor, has wickedly lied, telling Helene that Andre wanted to break the matter off. Therefore Helene had engaged herself to the elderly Valentin.

We presume that, well acted, Andre might be a sympathetic hero. Jerome Patrick, in the part, is merely an animated fashion plate. At any rate, despite unappealing actors, plays go on, and Helene elopes with Andre. Helene's grandmother, Madame de Trevillac, in order to surprise her grandchild, has gone to Helene's country place, where she is to spend her honeymoon. Mrs. Thomas Whiffen—whom dramatic critics who use unexaggerated presentment matter, always refer to as "dear Mrs. Thomas Whiffen"—is a grandmother after one's heart, and her work is the best in the play. When Helene arrives with Andre she mistakes Andre for the husband. And here is the weak spot in the comedy. The plot revolves upon Andre's failure to disclose the facts of the fight and the two staying at the house all night. Their blundering efforts to tell the truth are not in the least convincing. It would have been so simple a thing to do. However, until the final denouement, when all ends happily, amusing complications follow rapidly.

"HINDLE WAKES"

The Little Theatre Brings Philadelphia a Remarkable English Play. In "Hindle Wakes," the remarkable English play which the Little Theatre brought to Philadelphia last night, the late Stanley Houghton treats the old theme of the dual moral code from an original angle. He applies the scientist's method. He drops the old game of setting up an argument pro or con. He simply presents facts. They set out thinking that human conduct has considerably oversteered the conventions which are supposed to govern it, all by presenting a case that we recognize as plausibly true. Fanny's is a rather astonishing case to many of us. In spite of all story-book notions, here is a mill girl who doesn't necessarily want to marry the rich younger man with whom she has run off for a lark. The obvious scientific interest of all this is the discovery which we are all making that young women of our day, quite able to earn their own living, are asserting the right to choose their own pleasures and their spouses quite as young men have always done.

The play sets forth the return of Fanny from her lark to find the truth known to her parents and through them to the boy's family. From that it carries us on to consider the various views of all the people concerned: the father of the boy, who insists on marriage; the mother, who is "worldly-wise" and anxious to "save" her son; the fiancée, who is ready to forgive but determined to hold him to what he has done; her blessed father, who upholds the dual code from other motives. The father of the boy—a fine, crisp study of dominating common sense, acted with as cool a justice by Ian MacLaren—broods at all this on accepting the marriage. And then Fanny, hitherto unconsulted, topples the whole thing over with a declaration as startling and full of import as Nora's in "A Doll's House." She has had her fun with him; when she wants a husband she'll get herself a real man. Finely characterized throughout and as consistently acted—especially by Whitford Kane as the girl's simple old father—telling truth in the terms of personality and emotion, without factitious excitement or wordy argument, this new "Doll's House" marks itself one of the notable plays of the new century in England.
